JOHN HARDY.

ARAMINTA TO MEDORA

They had dragg'd your poor friend to the Church, Orlando is left in the lurch. By my side stood the youth of my passion. In a total derangement of dress, With his hair in a Werter-like fashion—

Oh! ye gods, that I ever said-"Yes." at the Church door we parted, when mug I Was placed in my chariet and four, While Orlando stept into a Buggy,

I was sever'd from all I adore; Grundy sestier'd some silver about him, Orlando look'd back in distress, At the silver, or me, can you doubt him? Medora, I'm sure, won't say -- "Yes."

On the evening before he protested We should feed upon love did we wed, And his looks were so meagre and wasted That I needs must believe what he said. A top-boot, he could not abide one, And for mounting a Cob-can you guess

You will my he han't got one-why yes. Then the chy's so much his aversion. His bills he can't bear to de fray 'em, And sooner than take that exeursion He never drinks mait with his oberse, love. Nor port after dinner, unless iome Irish Bacchante to please, love,

And then was obliged to say -"Yes." My Orlando is all inspiration, Thinks reading the papers a bore, Like all heroes, above education, But can Moore, Scott, and Byron adore. When I've ask'd him to read, he'd so stammer, And all the hard words he'd so miss, and make such false stops and false gran

Don't you think 't must have vexed him? - Oh yes Grundy offer'd his fortune and hand, love, Indigment I spurn'd at the wretch, Then a diamond necklase and band, love, With ear-rings and bracelets to match:

Then I thought of Orlando's endearings, His passion, our moments of bliss, Look'd at Grundy—the diamond-ear-rings— More dead than alive, groan'd out-"Yes." Ah! the wretch I have wedded is wealthy, Is only just five feet and eight, Looks cheerful and ediously healthy,

Has lands and a service of plate.

Don't you pity your friend, my Medora? To be snatch'd from my day-dream of bliss, From the particuless youth I adore—Ah! I think that I bear you sigh-"Yes."

May you never to wealth be allied, May you ne'er wed for houses or lands, May a Grundy se'er make you his bride, Nor be forced to wear diamond bands: May you live upon love in a grot, Nor envy the wealth I possess— You would spurn all such trash, would you not

Ah! I know my Medora 'li say-"Yes." Be advised, love-ah think what a treat With the youth of your heart to live free, In a grot with the moss at your feet, And a sweet pledge of love on your knee Ah' remember your wretched friend's fate.

If a Ques offers half his estate. Oh! never be brought to say--"Yes."

DICK DEWLAP.
Taking a stroll, the other morning, in the Regent's Park, with the intention of visiting the grounds of the Zoological Society, whom should I espy, sitting disconsolately on a bench not far from the entrance to that interesting emporium, but my old friend Dick Dewlap, whom I had not been able to meet, either at home or abroad, for the previous six weeks. Dick's taste for solitude arises from a circumstance serious enough to himself, but also sufficiently comic to every body else. Poor Dewlap, in short, though no glutton, is troubled with an unlucky tendency to corpuwhich has been prepared with the utmost care, and at read expense to the proprietors, who have succeeded a producing the richest perfume, free from any empyous feedeur. lency, which he finds exceedingly difficult to be > an instinctive feeling in all men;) moreover he does not at all relish the attempt, either to starve out the oily devil, or to eject him by persevering and violent exercise; but, at the same time, he no less deprecates the "thousand natural shocks that flesh is heir to," particularly the aptitude of obesity to make its victim look older than he ac tually is-no trifling annoyance to a bachelor of five and thirty, who would still fain pass in the world for a young and interesting sentimental. Beyond all other calamities, however, Dick execrates his office of butt to every witling and joker, friend or foe, wherever and whenever he becomes visible to human ken: so large a mark the most stupid archer cannot miss, and Dick it concerns) will no more object to an extra stone thinks that even his acquaintance sometimes shoot with poisoned arrows; but he generally suffers in patient acquiescence, and sometimes (probably with the view of deprecating hostility) even volunteers a watery joke on the subject like Falstaff, in the consciousness that " men of all sorts take a delight to gird at him," and that, on this theme, " he is not only witty in himself, but the cause of wit in others." Indeed, he has heads buoyant, as long as it is natural for a fat a sort of settled spicen towards his male ac- man to swim better than a lean one! Besides, quaintance generally, on this particular account, and luxuriates in the gentler society of females, under whose soothing influence he has gradual. knew every thing, knew perfectly well that a ly become as plump and tender as a pet rabbit, and usually takes his walk solus, unless triumphantly caracolling as the escort of some gentecly shaped damael; for he does not care to

however exceedingly tenscious of allowing the like privilege to male applicants; and confessed to me that he was never so shocked at his own enormity as once (going over Blackfriar's Bridge in a storm of wind and rain) when a little shrivelled dwarf of a fellow got under his lee, and whatever pace Dick went, would follow him up, and use his overshadowing figure as a penthouse.

But although my fat friend is too indolent to the enemy who sticks so perseveringly to every part of his person, he yet confesses to making a modest attempt to run away from it, now and then, when there is nobody within view. I never ould catch him at this benevolent amusement, 'larding the lean earth as he ran along;" but I suspect he had been thus employed on the preent occasion, for his face was flushed, and he looked a little splenetic, which it struck me might arise from the cruel feeling that such diapolical practices-so contrary to his usual musing and sauntering habits-were necessary to revent his hard-hearted tailor from enlarging the measurement, when next the fatal parch ment of that inexorable artist encompassed his "nether bulk." I happened to be once present when Dick was placed in this trying predicament. After the measure had, with my assistance, been passed round his rebellious waist (which he made a painful effort to draw in as much as possible for the occasion,) " Upon my word, Mr. Dewlap," said the tailor, " you get on ; I see by my book you have increased an inch and a half in the last three months!" The barbarous comtion was heard with as rueful an aspect as we might expect to see in the captain of a crass ship, who should receive the intelligence that, in spite of every effort, the leak evidently gained upon the vessel. Dewlap's only resource was stoutly to deny the fact; he vehemently protested that he had fallen away at least the fourth of an inch; that his clothes absolutely hung about him (by the by, the buttons were starting in every direction ;) and that if Mr. Hopkins could not should be reluctantly obliged to carry his custom

Dick did not appear to notice my approach;

o when I had arrived at the seat where he was lanted. I was constrained to solicit his attention What, Dewlap, my dear fellow," said 1, "how do you do ? I was fearful I should never get sight of you again; not that it would be essy to ______" "Good morning," said he of the twenty stone : " pray do you happen to know whether there's a ship about to start for China ?" I was of course startled at this abrupt interrogatory, and answered it, as is usual in such cases, by and answered it, as is usual in a said answered it, as is usual an your next sentence was to be redolent of some thing about my size ; I only wonder how it escaped the first six syllables; so I chose to indulge in the luxury of starting the one loved subject myself. In China then (where I mean to go,) as well as in other countries that we presumptu ously call barbarous, you know that the lean and working commonalty pay proper deference to us victims of enjoying temperaments. A man of my dimensions might there stand a chance of being made a mandarin, as one born with nature's stamp of nobility ; while here, the countless generation of whipper-snappers teaze us perpetu ally, as though we were sent into the world merely to serve as cushions for their ricketty wits to repose on." "Well," said I, " I am sorry to see you so warm, Richard ; but we'll discuss this matter as we walk; perhaps you'll take a turn with me into the grounds; I have to meet some friends there at twelve." " What," replied Dick, " some half dozen dapper little masters, 1 suppose, who are indulgently allowed to call themselves men, and would proceed to dissect me, sans ceremonie, with as much glee as so ously plagued with an excellent appetite, which many young surgeons would cut up the mammoth usly plagued with an excellent appetite, which punctually reminds him of meal times, and, like application, is well known, and the article now offered they are willing to enhant to any test. If, on trial, it is not found equal to the very best that has been imported, they will cheerfully receive it back, and return the purchae money.

AGENTS—MR. S. M. STEWART, Chesnut str having my mental awallow choked with my own substance. Confound them! I wish they were obliged to swallow their own jokes, and found care a button about it (making at the moment a desperate but fruitless effort to fasten the two object to me as I am, and men are too envious to express their real sentiments. Don't you observe," added he, "that women as seldom think a man too fat, as men do a woman? The most the sex of the corpulent beauty, male or female, matter; while the opposite gender (whom alone or two of leveliness, than they would to the liberality of the goldsmith, who should sell them plate at avoirdupois weight, instead of paltry troy. However, let men say what they will, I've this solid consolation, that three of the cleverest go floating down the atream of time, with their what does Hamlet's mother say of him?- My could not be otherwise. I have often thought character can never be done to perfection by any man under fifteen stone-a performer of at n cold weather, and effectually protects his good nature, and irritability of Ophelia's 'glass of | question, had made up his mind that the affair charmer from the ruder breezes of Boreas; he is fashion and mould of form' (an interesting creations of allowing the parately, and perfectly harmonious in combination."

Finding that Dick had talked himself into good humour, I took the opportunity of telling him they were ladies whom I was going to meet -the two Misses Lightfoot and their mam whose amiable manners, I flattered myself, he would find nicely conformable to his ideas of make any regular or acientific effort to shake off female taste and politeness. Dick brightened up at this intelligence, and immediately inquired, yards of cordiagr, about as thick as a brig's haw-with an air of interest (having, I believe, for some ser, and asked us, on our honour as gentlemen, time cherished the notion of getting himself well off his hands) " whether the mother was a wi- to answer a certain purpose? I replied, that I dow, and what might be her age?" I informed him she was the relict of the late Commissioner Lightfoot, well dowered, and extremely genteel-"The young ladies," added I, "are respectively seventeen and nineteeen" (Dick shrugged his houlders;) " they have learned-at least professors have been paid for teaching them-as many languages, arts, and sciences, as, to have known thoroughly, would have made a man illustrious half a century ago; but such is the fashion of a syllable, the day; and my aunt Lightfoot does not choose "When that her daughters should be left behind in this forced march of intellect, whatever valuable time they may have thrown away in order to make a show of keeping up with it. " A short time since (continued I) the damsels eemed likely to be sighing, like female Alexanders, for fresh realms of knowledge to subdue; but the introduction of calisthenics has, I should think, happily furnished them with employment for the rest of their lives, if they actually mean to make themselves mistresses of all the postures prescribed in the book from which they study .-You are a humane man, Mr. Dewlap; think, then, of the perplexity of a young lady, who is directed, as one of a hundred tasks equally easy, to 'place her two hands on her hips, raise the right leg and left arm as high as possible; the arm a little bent, and the hand above the shoulder; lower quickly the leg and the arm, placing the hand on the hip, and raising at the same time the left leg and the right arm. I protest, for my own part, after reading this singular jumble of legs, arms, hips, and shoulders, I hardly know whether I stand on my head or my heels; what then must be the predicament of a girl of sensibility, after she has taken her tutor's advice, and 'repeated the exercise several times with celerity?" surely she can never survive to go through the fatigues of 'crossing and jumping,' and numberless et ceteras. However, it is certain my poor ousins cannot do too much to strengthen digestions which have never been disturbed, and to keep down superfluous flesh, of which they have not the slightest symptom." Dick heard all this with profound attention, observing, that perhaps the young ladies, at my intercession, would impart to him some of the nestimable calisthenic knowledge, for which it seemed they had so little use themselves; and this, he said, would be the more compassionate, as he would die sooner than go through a course of gymnastics, in the presence of a set of male monsters, who would probably scoff at his efforts of sgility, as we may suppose so many monkeys would, if they could catch an elephant easaying

a hornpipe. Dewlap now cordially gave me his arm; and as we walked towards the gardens, I primed him for his interview with the widow, by the information that she was not merely a femme savante in the general sense, but a particular connoisseur in painting; and that, in this character, she could not fail to be struck with that predomi nance of the curve (allowed by all artists to be the line of beauty) which was visible in every part of his comely outline : his plump cheeks, carried in front. Dick looked ruefully at the semicircle I had last described. "Ah!" said he, with a sigh, "you'd hardly think what a perpetual torment I find this line of beauty, as you call it; the line of Jack Ketch would be scarcely less | who blushed as he bowed, and was received very welcome , and, indeed, I did dream, the other graciously, but with a kind of conscious reserve night, that it had been the means of introducing me to an acquaintance with that worthy." I could not belp laughing at this nocturnal exravaganza, and asked him the particulars. "I believe," said Dick, "my dream bad a commencement rather tragical than uncommon, for few people can acquit their consciences of having dreamed they were going to be hung, though them as hard of digestion as I do. Not that I I never could get any one to own that he also knew he had done enough to deserve the punishment. Unluckily for me, however, I had not lower ligatures of his surtout;) the women don't even this consolation, I thought I was to be hung for being for fat; and so far was I from feeling shocked at the circumstance, that I was only rprised how I had escaped so long. Though in Newgate, I was perfectly tranquil, and re tolerant critics on this point are sure to be of crived with resignation the intelligence that I was to be hung the following morning, the cause though such critics have no right to a vote in the being, simply and solely, because two creshble witnesses had sworn that, in their judgment, I was too fat to be allowed to live any longer.

" Still more at his case, however, if possible," continued Dewlap, " was Daniel Lambert, who was, I thought, my fellow prisoner, and to suffer in the same way, for a far weightier offence of the same unpardonable description. As the himself; albeit, by no means inclined to triumph, fellows of our time, have also been three of the kitchen (for with a dreamer's privilege, Limaginplumpest—Charles Fox, Byton, and Napoleon—ed all this took place in a Newgate kitchen) as there was a podgy triumvirate? I faucy they'd the kitchen, I say, was not over large—and my partner and I were-we could not move about without jostling each other; so I helped Daniel perch himself on the top of an empty hogehead, that stood near the dresser, and there he son is fat and scant of breath.' Shakspeare, who sat, drumming with his mill posts against the side of his pinnacle, his hands placed quiescent. fine tender hearted philosopher, like Hamlet, ly under his knees, and his pouting lips suitably employed in half-whistling 'See the conquering of playing Hamlet myself : depend upon it, that Hero comes.' I supposed that pour Daniel, heing at least three times my weight (I found that circumstance no small consolation,) had long would terminate fatally, from the moment he was seized and shoved into a wagon. I cannot the matter in a proper light, must have considered me a martyr in comparison with himself; the victim of a law, equally just and necessary as it regarded him, but, in my case, carried to a most to their curiosity, and frisked most (cruel extreme.

continued Dick, "when Mr. Ketch made his appearance, bringing in his hand some twenty whether we thought that would be strong enough could not speak from experience, but I flattered myself the line was strong enough, and that for me he need not be at the trouble of getting a chain cable. As for Mr. Lambert, I left him to speak for himself, as he had not favoured me with any remarks on things, either in general or particular. Daniel, I suppose, heard this re-mark; but he still kept whistling and drumming with undisturbed calmness, and did not answer drank it off, with the serenity of a Bucrates,-My friend Daniel witnessed the heroic performance with equal apathy, and still continued drumming and whistling 'See the conquering Hero comes.'

"As a convicted fat man, anxious for the ho-nour of the chief of his caste, I could not help feeling somewhat piqued at Mr. Lambert's indif-ference to his impending disgrace. 'Why, Daniel,' said I, ' will you be fool enough to be led out to-morrow morning, at eight precisely, to dance in the air for the amusement of the skin and bone scoundrels who have sworn away our lives, and will gloat over our fatal fall, as they would over the prize beef that they devour, as well as kill? Why don't you behave like a man, quickly invest him with a waist like that described on as I have done? He reply petrified med by the poet (exemplified in each of the own, by the by,) "fine by degrees, and beautiful its hardly worth while. The fact is, that the Secretary of State (on condition of our estimates) with gratitude; and, when we arrived at the secretary of the secretary ing no more rump steaks) has sent down our pardons, and I've got them both at this moment n my pocket.

"Here was an answer to give a man whom he had just seen swallow laudanum enough to kill a cart horse! After staring at him for half a minute, with 'thought too deep for tears'-indeed I was studying which way to sacrifice him-my indignation at length found utterance-' Why, you envious overgrown villain,' said 1, ' why did not you tell me this before? ' Why did not I. replied he (as if confident I could not possibly object to his most exquisite reason,) why, because you did not ask me!' What signified arguing with such a dolt? I determined to make short work of it. 'Now, you fat fool,' cried I (going up to him with my clenched fiet,) ' now must go and have the laudanum taken out of me with the stomach pump, through your stupidity-take that! (knocking him off his perch into the empty hogshead, the top of which and dealy gave way behind him;) and 4 think 1 sible to remember, the numberless contents awoke with the noise he maile in bawling out- (all doubtless equally useful and ornemental) cluded Dick, " you may judge whether I am not as much to be pitied for my nightly visions as any double chin, and the gentle protuberance he opium eater in England. I'll dream against the This chat had brought us to the place which | us with an invitation to dinner.

> on the part of the genteel widow, which I powers of activity and endurance, which he had thought augured not ill for him. Dewlap, though evidently gratified with his reception by the ladies, was not quite pleased to find they had brought with them our old acquaintance, Toby Aircastle, a mere mathematical line of a man, whose lath-like apparition contrasts so provokingly with Dick's circular tendencies, that few can resist hazarding a hit now and then on the Toby, who is a married man, so well subject. as a professed joker, rather relishes than dislikes this state of juxta-position with Dewlap, and often provokes him to an encounter, in which, lowever. Dewlap now, there fore (ladies being present) treated Mr. Aircastle as he studiously called him) with the gravest re as he studiously called him) with the gravest respect, and seemed as fearful of making a false step in conversation, as a young legacy hunter would was that of David James Dove, an Englishman. of treading on the goaty toe of his rich and protable uncle. Dewlap, though evidently nettled, merely howed, and gravely observing that he never laid wagers, here tily wished Mrs. Aircastle who were late in the morning attendance. The way to despatch a committee of five er its schenever laid wagers, hea tily wished Mrs. Aircastle a happy deliverance of twins.

Aircastle winked at me, with the eye that was turned from the rest of the company, but with laudable forbearance hold his tongue. She afterwards Richard, with an air of triumph courtesy that would have done honour to ion-hearted namesake, offered his pu to Mrs. Lightfoot, and we left the gardens, me pleased with our visit and ourselves.

As we walked towards the residence of the le-dies, which skirts the park, the subject of calls thenics was started; and, at my suggestion, the obliging damsels proffered, if Mr. Dewlap really thought himself rather too stout (which, how thought himself rather too stout (where, was by no means apparent to them) to give him, from their book of knowledge, come is structions, which they had no doubt would structions, which waste like that describe with gratitude; and, when we arrived at the house, Dick allowed me, as a special favour (vesolutely excluding poor Tuby) to be pres his inaugural lesson.

Mr. Dewlap was first directed to take the dumb-bells, and open his chest, as the best pre-parative for other amusements that awaited hims with these he practised for some minutes, when, with panting pathos, he requested a truce, and begged that his exercise, though he found it exceedingly pleasant, might be varied as often as possible. In order to accommodate him, a skipping rope was now put into his hands, and his grotesque performances with it, made me think the days of Orpheus and jumping towers had returned; the skipping rope, however, was soon with Irawn, as it is well known our houses now-adays are not built with any view of resisting the shock of an earthquake , moreover, the cook came up to complain that all the plates and dish-

ROYAL AND NOBLE RESIDENCES.

HOLDERNESS HOUSE, the town residence of the Marquir and Marchiness of Londonderty, is situated in Park lane, at the corner of Hertford street. There is nothing remarkable in the architecture of the exterior, except its ze and compactness: the front commands a fine iew across flyde Park.
From the entrance hall, an ascent of two steps, and massive folding doors, admit us into the vestibule; where the first object that meet he eye is a marble pedectal, supporting a fine bust of Pat. At the four corners are four figures of Victory in rosso-antico, bearing the palse branch and the wreath. These, as we are in-formed by an inscription on the pedestal, were presented by Pius VII. to the late Marquis. then Lord Castlereagh, on the signing of the occeeding to the left, we second a more nagnificent double staircase lighted from above we immonse candelabra of bronze and Ormolu in the form of initiary trophes, stand one on each side of the ascent. A gallery,—the balostrade of bronze and or mole of a rich and beautiful pattern,—runs round the top, consuminating with the various apartments. The roof, and one, is supported by plasters of gaillo-antico, with white marble capitals; and the ceiling is elegantly painted in initiation of moulding in telled. The architectural effect is, on the whole, exceedingly beautiful, and in the most excellent taste. To the left of this staircase, on the ground floor, we turn into the spacious daingtoom: the side board, covered with cromson cloth, occupies one end of this room; the fireplace is at the other. The furniture is, of course, solid and simple; but the pictures are numerous, and some of them line and interesting; in particular, there are portraits of the late Marquis the form of military trophics, stand one or ticular, there are portraits of the late Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry, when young: they are early productions of Lawrence, and are painted with a sweetness which reminds us of Hoppiner, but with more of airy brilliance than his pictures usually possess. There is a fine three-quarter portrait, of Patt, by the latter artist, a full length of his present Majesty; two portraits of Napoleon, from the Crawford collection—one as Coard, the other as Euperoria the first, the expression is that of thoughtfulness, uningled with resolution, the latter has all the wifelness and energy resulting from habits ular, there are portraits of the late Mar ness, nangled with resolution; the latter has all the wifulness and energy resulting from habits of command, the first seems to say, "I will" the latter says, "You shall!" Napoleon sat for both these pictures, which gives them a particular value. There are also two small pictures representing the Battle of Talavera, in which the Marquis so bravely distinguished himself; they were the gift of the Duke of Weilington, after the Conclusion of the Pennsular War. The other pictures were purchased from the collection of Murat; and among them are some good specimens of the Italian school.

lington, painted by Sir Thomas Lawrence in 1814, immediately after the conclusion of the Peninsular War. The dignified air of the head, the fine characteristic simplicity of the leok and attitude, and the magnificent painting of the back-ground, so full of poetry and granden, where the troubled clouds seem rolling away before the resplandent gleams of the evening ear, —render this one of the finest picture Lawrence ever painted. Two other portraits by the same artist hang in this room:—the half-length of Layl Londonderry, (in which he has more happing caught the turn of the head, and the look of careless, easy languishment peculiar to the original, than in the sphendid whole-length since painted,) and the lovely little picture of her infantson, Lord Scalam; both these were exhibited at Somerset House some years ago. Two tables of pietra dura, and two rich antique cabitables of pietra dura, and two rich antique cabinets, composed of agite, jasper, lapis lazuli, &c., and which were formerly at Wanstead, complete the decorations of this room.

We next proceeded to the grand drawing-room, a noble apartment between forty and tifty feet in length; the ceiling painted in compart-ments in a style similar to the preceding rooms, but even more elaborately rich and elegant. The hangings are of dark craisson velvet; the win-dow-curtains and drapones of rich amber-coloured nilk; the sofas and chairs are curved and that the calinets in this room, as well as those already mentioned in the first drawing room once stood in the royal apartments at Versailles. They were purchased by Lord Londordery at They were parchased by Lord Londonderry at an immense price; afterwards formed part of the farmiture of his Lordshop's hotel at Vienna, when he was ear ambassador there; and were brought thence to England. The mirror over the fire-place is a single gigantic plate of glass, in a frame lightly and richly carved; and two models in brass of the Trojan and Antonine columns at Rome stand on the mantle-piece.—

There are also two beautiful inlaid trunks on stands, brought from Malmaison, with tables of pietra dura, porcelain, &c. pictra dura, porcelain, &c.

pictra dura, porceiam, &c.

But all the rarties in this room are effaced by the value and splendour of the pictures; they are seven in number, all admirable specimens of the finest Italian schools, and two among them of the hear Halian schools, and two among them absolutely unrivalled in the world:—te allude to the far-famed Correggios. The acquisition of these pictures by a British nobleman forms an epoch in the history of the arts in England, and their history, and the manner in which they came to form part of our national treasures (for came to form part of our national resulters (national rans such, though the property of an individual, they may well be considered,) are equally curious and interesting. The "Ecce Homo," for instance, is the same famous picture once in the possession of Prince Colonna, and considered one of the heir-looms of that great family; it was then in the Borghese Gallery, and passed we know not how, into the possession of the Kings of Spain. The other Correggio, "L'Eduation de l'Amour," was once before in England, in the collection of Charles the First, who obtained it from Italy; and on the sale of his treasures of art, by order of parliament, it was purchased by the son of the terrible Duke of Alva, who sent over an agent from the Netherands, expressly to make this acquisition, and paid for it 1000/, sterling, an enormous sum for the time. It thus found its way into Spain, and, at length, into the royal collection at Madrid Murat forcibly seized on both these wonderful pictures, and carried them off to Naples. On his flight and overthrow, they were sent by Madame Murat to Vienna, under the especial pro-tection of Prince Metternich, and remained for some time at her residence of Fohradorff, near

Vienna.

During the Congress at Vienna, the Baron Macdonaid arrived as the accredited agent of Madame Murat, commissioned to sell her pictures for the purpose the extensible purpose, at least—of providing funds to send her son Achille. Murat to America. Prince Metternich an Murat to America. Prince Metternica and others strongly represented to the Emperor of Austria the impolicy of allowing two acknowledged wonders of art to be carried out of his dominious; but he Imperial Mejesty, the most moral and phlegmatic of Princes, is not celobrated for his taste and munificence: he was braice for his taste and munificence; he was aware that Metternich (who, besides being a politician, has also the reputation of being a man of gallantry,) had his own private reasons for befrouding Carolina Murat; and be had some scruples about the manner in which these picscrucias about the manner in which these pic-tures had come into her possession—in short his Majesty listened coldly, thought of his purse and talked of his conscience—told over his du-cats in magination,—and could not be made to comprehend that it was among the duties of overeign to purchase Correggios: in conclu-tered into a negotiation with Macdonald, and wished to have made the purchase for the Em-divinity of lyrginess—it is the very perfection of voluptuous grace. It struck us that there was a little fault of sentiment, in making Venus looking out of the picture, instead of bending her eyes upon her son. Perhas, in another her eyes upon her son. Perhas, in another point of view, this may be considered a touch of character: Correggio might have intended, that, in the goddness of blandshments and wreathed amides, the self-complicately of conscious beauty should supersede even the rentiment of materhould superside even the rentiment of mater-nity. This most enchanting picture measures five ect by three; is in the most perfect state of pre-creation, and is very properly defended by plate class. The other pictures in this room are— witoly Family, by Andrea del Sarto, one of finest specimens of this master in existence; large pictures, by Guercino, in his best ner, when he endeavoured, not quite suc-fit ly, to combine the poarly delicacy of Guido er represents "Joseph and Potiplar's Wife other, "Amnon and Tamar." STEED STATES, is now so nearly completed, that he has fixed the 10th of August in the superior theorement, and the malaritaneous control of the superior to t next as the day of publication; having regild in the head of the virgin fainting, the dying away of the seanes, under the pressure of unotterable anguish, is portrayed with the most exquisite pathos and delicacy. The dimensions of this picture are, I feet 3 in, by 2 feet 8 in. In the "Réseastion sie l'Armour," (Mercury teaching Cupid to read, and Vennestanding by,) nothing can be more beautiful than the forced attention of the little Love, pointing to his letters; while the figure of Venus breathes the full divinity of leveliness—it is the very perfection of voluptuous grace. It strucks in that there is vary demand for fancy patterns, which is sold, and which is most valued, comes from England; in general, ladies' clothing is very perfection of course of foreign manufacture, is full double the price at which it might be supposed for in ittle demand for fancy patterns, which are source and high-priced. The cutlery is very inferior to that of France, and the greater part of that which state of France, and the greater part of that which state of France, and the greater part of that which of course of foreign manufacture, is full double the price at which it might be purchased for in France or England. The jewellery is so clumsily made and with such little taste, that foreign-made articles are preferred and fetch a good price. Boots and shoes are generally very ill made, and I do not believe that you could find in Madrid a tailor who can make a coat at all to fit you, although the black and blue cloths are of a fine quality, and very cheap."

The rain descended in torrents, and the wind blew with such violence, as to prostrate the crops of small grain, and almost all the fene-ing on some farms, and committed great haves among the orchard and forest trees. Nearly two hundred timber trees were blown down upon one farm. The same paper states that the crops of small grain are mostly cut and secured. The wheat is in general very good, probably more than an average crop. But the rye has been much injured by the severity of the winterpand it is stated as the general impression, that there will not be half an average crop. Information was brought by a master of a vessel from Paita, who was at Tomaco on the 19th of April, after a passage of 16 days, that parties of 200 or 300 men were marching about the streets in Lima, fighting and shouting in favor of the Liberator. The casualty probably arose from a few mo-ments delay in helping off a sick passenger. On Saturday evening, nearly 500 people are supposed to have collected near the spot, and word having been given out that he would not appear until 11 o'clock, the tavern keepers in the neighbourhood drove a pretty trade in the matter of providing suppers, &c. The affair appears to have been set on foot by some young men, to test the courage of a companion who had expressed his debelief of apparitions. Greenfield, Conn. July 14.—A melancholy and distressing murder was perpetrated in Ashfield, Mass. on Toesday, the 7th instant, by a man named Alfred Elmer. He fancied himself commissioned from Heaven to kill three persons, and derived his warrant, as he says, from the 11th chapter of Revelation. His victims were a child about two years old, an only son of Mr. Timothy Catlin, who was killed on the spot, and an old gentleman, grandfather of the culprit, who was so severely wounded that there is no hope of his surviving. The child he killed because it was innocent. At the time of the deed the mother of the child was miking; on being told that Elmer had gone into the house with a razer in his hand, she immediately returned to the house, and on entering the room found the child dead in the cradle in which she had left it sleeping, having its throat cut in a shocking manner. The criminal, having committed this horrid deed, hastened to his grandfather, whom he struck on the head with an axe, and would have repeated the blow, but for the interference of some females who were present. The old gentleman is between 70 and 80 years of age. Since the commitment of the prisoner to the jail in this town, he observed, on being questioned, that he had sometimes had thoughts of committing suicide, but that he had none now, and had none when he killed the child. The prisoner was undoubtedly insane. He awaits his trial at the next term of the Supreme Court, to be held in September next.

Salem, N. J. July 15.—A heavy fall of rain on Wednesday last was preceded and accompanied with a destructive gale of wind. In Lower Penn's Neck and Manington it assumed the tornado—prostrating much oreharding, woodland, and fences, unroofing, and etherwise injuring buildings. The gable end of Elisha Basset's brick house was, we understand, blown in it commenced its destructive career on the other side of the Delaware, where, in an excursion there, we witnessed much timber prostrated but appears not to have acquired its full force till it reached Lower Penn's Neck. A large apple-tree was taken clear from the ground and carried a hundred yards or more; a sycamore, three feet through, near the roots, was, we understand, taken clear, and carried over a fence without mjury to the latter, and others taken entirely clear by the roots were carried various distances.

of an electric shock. Several persons were much stu ned by the stroke, but no material injury was sustained.

We learn that during the storm yesterday evening, a sail boat containing nine persons was capsized in the river, between Whetstone Point and Harris's Creek. The boat is said to have sunk as soon as she went over, and six of the number were drowned. The occurrence was witnessed by several persons at Littlejohn's tavern, two of whom, Messrs. George W. Ellis and George Leary, put off in a very small boat, and by great exertions succeeded in picking up three of the men belonging to the sail-boat.—
The extreme smallness of the boat prevented them from taking in any mores. The men who were picked up reported the names of their lost companions to be, Thomas Solden, Richard Smith and his son, a lad of eight or nine years, James Tezin, Thomas Baggot, and James O'Connor. This melancholy information was communicated to us at a late hour last night, by young gentlemen who were at Littlejohn's at the time of the storm. They add that several sail-boats were espessed in the same squall.

the Dock, she had on board about 100 tons of ballast and cargo, and men were engaged at work on her rigging; yet so simple and admirable is the contrivance, that no part of the eargo was removed, and the repairs to the rigging were carried on without the slightest interruption from the operations of the Dock. Every one who has visited this novel improvement appears to be fully satisfied of its value and importance. One of the best evidences in its favor is the fact that the Dock has scarcely been an hour unoccupied since its completion. The Dock is accorded at Ramany's wharf, Fell's arested at Ramany's wharf, Fell's an hour unoccupied since its completion. Salisbury, N. C. July 7.—Among the gold found in Burke county, and brought to this town, is a very curious pace, which we are told "is very like a gun lock." It has been suggested to us, by those who have examined this singular piece of mechanism, that it is not impossible the aborigines of the country, ere the arts were introduced among them, may have wrought not only their "gan-locks," but most of their other other necessary implements, from the precious metal him, but in vain. Finding the strength of the tide precluded all hope of success, they desisted until the evening, when, renewing their attempts, they finally succeeded in obtaining he body. Chinese Sensitive Leaf.

Chinese Sensitive Leaf,
INVENTED BY JAN PERTITA CHARRICTO.
FINHESE Leaves, plonaing even at first sight, are able to divert a whole company; their impartial judgment gives sufficient matter for joccose entertainment, and if care be taken to put them between the leaves of a book, they will never lose their virtue.

To know the temper of a person, place the Leaf in the palm of his or her left hand, and it will immediately more off itself. If the person is of a ranguing temper, if quickly rolls itself up and falls from the band. If he is of a choleric temper, it rolls up and moves towards the wrist.
If of a phleguastic temper, it will notly bend a little as remain in the palm of the hand. In the hand of a person of an even temper, it will move in a very pleasing manner, neither too tast unclose slow, the same and falses a person, at first sight, will not know them to be tificial.

These Leaves, in the shape of a Fish, Chingo Wemen, Merumaids, &c. are to be had wholeraste and retails at No. 23 Chessust street, Philadelphu; and at the principal Looking Glass and Fancy Steres in this city.
